Up A Creek Without A Paddle-- Or A Motor Or A Boat!

All too often boat enthusiasts find themselves literally up the proverbial creek-or on some other body of water-without a paddle or worse without a motor or even a boat. The reason-simple carelessness.

Boaters know and practice water safety rules. Most obey the navigational laws. However many fail to utilize crime resistance techniques in pursuing the pleasures derived from boating. If practiced diligently, a few preventive measures could well prevent the theft of a boat or valuable accessories such as motors, life jackets, oars and CB radios.

Small boats such as canoes, rowboats and motor boats are easy to steal and thereafter to conceal and transport away. If it is necessary to leave such a craft unattended, secure it with a good lock and tempered steel chain fastened to a solidly fixed post or a tree. Remember, the boat is only as secure as the object to which it is chained.

Larger boats should also be securely fastened when possible. In addition, by removing a necessary part of the motor, you make it difficult for someone to drive the boat away, to steal it or take it for a joy ride.

Permanently mark your craft with the boat's name and your driver's license number preceded by your state's initials. Do the same with all your accessories. This may deter a thief from taking them. Even if it doesn't stop a thief, it will make the property identifiable if it is recovered by the police. It is also important to keep a record of all the serial numbers and descriptions of radios, motors and other gear for the purpose of identification in case of theft.

When you have to leave your boat unattended, take a few minutes to lock up your gear and accessories. Putting items in the trunk of your car is much safer than leaving them lay around loose in and around your boat.

Do not hesitate to call the police and report suspicious persons loitering or prowling around boats or marinas.

Remember, too, that your local police department can offer additional suggestions to make your boat and boating equipment less vulnerable to thieves.
